

INSTITUTE FOR ADVANCED STUDY

Will There be a Heritage Conservation Field in 50 Years?

Randall Mason

Graduate Program in Historic Preservation
School of Design, University of Pennsylvania

Wednesday, March 28, 4:00 p.m., 125 Nolte Center

Beverages will be served

The field of historic preservation is at a crossroads. The pull of traditional curatorial concerns and the lure of urgent urban and societal issues are dividing the field along lines of inward-looking preservationists and outward-looking, preservation-minded designers, planners and historians. Professor Mason draws on the history of the preservation field, a summary of contemporary issues, and its long-term future.

Organized by the Institute for Advanced Study Teaching Heritage Collaborative

UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA
Driven to Discover